Is the N.R.A. Constitutional?

With the approach of cool weather the honeybees of the National Industrial Recovery Administration will soon be gathering the nectar of the legal and economic sweetmeats which will be focused upon the coming trial of the N.R.A., for the validity of the act as a whole and of the contract of June 18, 1933, will be determined.

The outcome of the determination of the U.S. Supreme Court will be a notable triumph for the administration and its leaders. The Institute of Current History, a Washington corporation, has been organizing for the last two years to study the administration's activities and to present the case for the constitutionality of the N.R.A. The outfit will take part in the coming trial.

The administration, in making its presentation, will rely upon the case of Plessy v. Ferguson, the 1896 lower court decision in which the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the segregation laws of the South.

The Institute of Current History, in its case, will present the evidence that the N.R.A. is a justifiable and necessary step in the field of commerce and industry.

In its conclusion, the Institute will state that the N.R.A. is a justifiable and necessary step in the field of commerce and industry.

Cigarettes

Of all the ways in which tobacco is used the cigarette is the mildest form.

You know, ever since the Indians found out the pleasure of smoking tobacco, there have been many ways of enjoying it. But of all the ways in which tobacco is used, the cigarette is the mildest form. Another thing—cigarettes are the most convenient smoke. All you have to do is strike a match. Everything that money can buy and everything that science knows about is used to make Chesterfield.

The right home-grown tobacco—seasoned with just enough aromatic Turkish leaf—is blended with a specially selected tobacco from the West Indies, then with a percentage of just the right kind of wild tobacco, the Chesterfield that's Milder, then with the cigarette that Tastes Better.
